Spokesman John Alexander has been in contact with the former Manchester United boss several times over the past few days, telling to the Reds' faithful that Ferguson was available for advice. Alexander has been speaking to the media at the Emirates for the first time since the United legends game, which was broadcast live on Monday. However, the spokesman has also played down the former boss' comments about potentially coming back to the game. "We have been in contact but there have been no discussions," Alexander told the Manchester Evening News. "Everyone has a right to think about life after football and we are clear that Alex will continue with that. "There have been no discussions between Alex and the club." Ferguson, who will be marking United's 500th game against Swedish side Malmo in the Europa League on Thursday, is currently contracted to as a global ambassador for Nike but is keen on returning to football. Asked whether he has spoken to the Nike company about a return to management, the ex-Red declined to comment. On Tuesday, Ferguson spoke about 'the new world order' and the'money-driven' football game. "Football, to me, is not just a game, it's a beautiful life," he said. "I've been lucky enough to play for a long, long time and I've enjoyed it and I've been lucky enough to be involved in managing for a long, long time. "But I've got a point to make and that is football has changed a lot in the last few years, but it's not just the money-driven world we live 1cb139a0ed
