Firebird connection fails even though.fbServerAuthInfo file exists I am connecting to a Firebird database server using firejb 6.0 using the security provided by the.fbServerAuthInfo file. I have the right permissions on my.fbServerAuthInfo file to make sure it is readable by my account.
However, I still get an error when connecting to the server. I am looking for a solution that doesn't require knowing the user's password, and involves minimal configuration changes if possible. I know that if I specify the port in the connection string, I get an authentication dialog (just not for Firebird). But I'd like to avoid that if possible. I've looked at the firejb and.fbServerAuthInfo documentation, but I don't see an option to only use the.fbServerAuthInfo file. A: First of all, consider that the connection string has the port but the user password. So if the server is listening on the port, and the server has the correct credentials, then the connection is going to work. In the other hand if the server is not listening on the
