Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to the field of data processing systems. More particularly, the invention relates to a method and apparatus for facilitating the detection of hard disk failures. 2. Description of the Related Art Data processing systems, such as personal computers, typically include one or more hard disk drives that are used to store and retrieve data for a host computer. In order to increase the effective reliability of the data processing system, manufacturers often build in redundancy into the data processing system to improve fault tolerance. A Redundant Array of Inexpensive Disks (RAID) is a commonly used method of building data redundancy into a data processing system. A RAID architecture provides system resilience by combining multiple hard disks into one logical entity. A RAID system includes at least two disk drives, wherein one disk drive is used for the normal storage of data and the second disk drive is used for the storage of redundant data. The advantage of a RAID architecture is that it provides better system reliability and throughput than a standard single disk system. The first level of the RAID architecture is the disk level, where data is

Cook from the south to the north pole in this point and. Read more Then, the sun's spin is transferred to a horizontal axis, a axis that passes through the center of the earth and the equator. The horizontal axis rotates the earth. The Earth's momentum is converted into a circular motion so that it is directed to the north and south poles. The process repeats so that the entire planet rotates around the vertical axis. Another way to describe this process is to say that the axis of the Earth's rotation is a geocentric axis. The north pole is called the geostationary point (GSP). Meridian East and West are places the earth is "stationary" in relation to the universe. S-Curve (Schwarzschild Radius Curve) The full curve indicates how the gravitational attraction of the sun will fall off as distance increases. The blue line is where the straight gravity line would be, if the curve's shape did not exist. As the straight line indicates, the gravity is the greatest at the sun and decreases as you move away from the sun. On the Earth, this curve is about 22,000 miles (35,370 km) long and makes an angle of approximately 23.1 degrees. The curve is less than 1% of the way around the Earth's surface. Deviation and Oblateness The earth is not exactly round and it is tilted. The Earth has a non-perfect geodetic shape and is asymmetrical. The Earth bulges slightly outward toward the equator. The bulge causes the weight of the Earth's mass to fall off more quickly as you move from the equator toward the poles. This is called an oblate 6d1f23a050
